Short bio

Adriana Di Stefano is Associate Professor of European Union Law at the Law Department of the University of Catania where she researches and teaches on core areas of public international law and EU Law, including issues of international responsibility, denial of justice, citizenship, migration and human rights. She holds a Ph.D. in Political Philosophy and Human Rights (2005) and has been visiting scholar at Universiteit van Amsterdam, Tel Aviv University, Melbourne Law School, the Australian National University College of Law and University of Michigan Law School. Based in Sicily, she is currently leading an interdisciplinary research project "Living in-between laws: towards a transnational model of ius migrandi" (2014-2017) dealing with theories and practices on migrants fundamental rights in the Mediterranean. Her main research interests are focused on transnational law perspectives of EU law and interactions between legal orders. She has published extensively on questions related to international law and human rights, legal pluralism, solidarity, cohesion and territorial cooperation in the EU and is finalizing a research project on the effectiveness of local remedies in international and supranational human rights regimes. Focusing on legal education and practice-oriented training models, Adriana serves as representative for international relations and Director of the Cohesion and Law Programme, coordinating a professional network on Gender Issues and International Legal Standards and a Legal Clinic on Human Rights & EU Law. Admitted to practice as a lawyer in Italy, she acts as a consultant to governmental and non-governmental agencies in the fields of EU Law and Human Rights and is a member of the International Law Association's Committee on Feminism and International Law.
